Dear Portfolio Visitor,

My name is Hannah Mason and I have been making movies since I could call “action!”

Growing up in a rural forest town, I spent much of my childhood creating stories with rich and fantastical worlds, and watching and studying films. This lifelong passion for worldbuilding, storytelling, and movies led me to Portland State University, where I was able to study film production and theory. My film style is deeply tied to my small town roots, often dealing with themes of isolation, sentimentality, and nature.

Much of my film work has been very autonomous. I am highly enthusiastic and deeply passionate about filmmaking from the beginning stages of conceiving an idea, through production and post production, through distribution. Because of this, I find myself wearing many hats: Writer, producer, director, cinematographer, set designer, gaffer, editor, sometimes sound recordist, often times many of these roles on a single project.

I am very detail oriented and hold myself to a high quality standard of work, but while I may be particular, I am also a team player who enjoys collaboration, is open and excited to learn new ideas and techniques, and loves to help others turn their creative vision into a reality. I look forward to helping you turn your creative vision into a reality as well!

I look forward to connecting with you!

Sincerely,
Hannah Joan Mason
